Grief, loss, and pain are significant and unavoidable parts of the human experience, but they're often overlooked or minimized. In moments of heartache and challenges, we either crumble or we discover the richness of God's love. Scripture deals plainly and honestly with suffering and simultaneously points people the rich hope we find in God. When someone is grieving, what should we say? How can we help? How do we comfort without offering shallow platitudes? Though our tendency in times of sorrow is to look down and inward, Scripture beckons us to look up and out, because our help comes from the Lord.

The Bible has played a starring role in American history from our nation's beginnings. When George Washington was sworn into office as our first president, he did not place his hand on the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution of the United States, as hallowed as those documents are. Instead, he swore upon and even kissed the Bible to sanctify this important moment. The Bible, Washington knew, had ushered American history to this point. Trying to explain American history without its Bible is like trying to understand the human body without its bloodstream. Had there been no Bible, there would be no America as we know it.

For many women, having a baby girl is a dream come true. Yet as girls grow up, the narrative of innocence and joy changes to gloom and doom as moms are told, "Just wait until she's a teenager!" and handed a disheartening script that treats a teenage girl's final years at home as solely a season to survive. Author and blogger Kari Kampakis suggests it's time to change the narrative and mind-set that lead moms to parent teen girls with a spirit of defeat, not strength. By improving the foundation, habits, and dynamics of the relationship, mothers can connect with their teen daughters.

New York Times bestselling author Lysa TerKeurst leans into the deeply personal topic of rejection and takes readers on a journey to explore its roots; the lies we believe as a result; and the truth about who God is, who we are, and what it looks like to live loved. Dismantles our dreams. And blinds us to the beauty of Christ's powerful love.

She’s got it all together!” The roles women play in society today are drastically different than they were 25 years ago, and some of the rules are different as well. “Somewhere along the way,” says the author, “the art of being a lady was lost in the shuffle to become a self-sufficient, straight shooting, aggressive survivor in the world . . . Some of us lost sight of the rewards that being a lady could bring.”

You can make anything better simply by putting the word Southern in front of it. Southern hospitality. Southern culture. Southern rock. Southern football. Southern cooking. The cuisine of the South is often referred to as "comfort food." This is not only because it can fill you up when you are hungry or warm your belly on a cold day, but also because the cooks who inhabit Southern kitchens genuinely seek to offer comfort to the lucky folks who share their table. Love is the implied first ingredient in many favorite recipes.
